DENALI NATIONAL PARK

This huge national park (6 million acres) is a scenic wilderness with a vast array of wildlife, such as grizzly bears, caribou, moose, Dall sheep, wolves and many species of raptors. It is also home to Mt McKinley, the highest peak in Nth America.

There is only one public road leading into Denali and access is regulated by the National Park Service. Only a few lodges are located within the park, otherwise all accommodation is at the park gate. With private vehicles not allowed, visitors take either the park shuttle or one of the organised tour buses that travel along the park road stopping enroute for photographs and wildlife, before returning to the park gate the same day.

If you would like a more intimate wilderness experience away from the crowds, then we strongly recommend incorporating a stay at one of the backcountry lodges within Denali into your Alaskan itinerary.

Please note: Denali is closed prior to mid-May and after mid-September due to weather conditions.
